

Tips On How To Make An Essay Longer and Avoid Plagiarism

The practice of plagiarism is highly discouraged in the academic world. You should try to avoid it in non-academic papers too because of the ethical issues they might lead to. A professional essay writer takes pride in producing original work. Because that is what makes you a dignified person and it also helps contribute something original to the world and the existing literature.

First of all, plagiarism is an unethical practice that is equivalent to stealing. Secondly, it undermines your credibility in the eyes of people. People with true academic spirit neither practice nor encourage plagiarism. Thirdly, it undermines your professional career to a significant extent. When your employer learns that you plagiarize regularly, you might face irreversible consequences. People who excessively depend on others for success are more likely to cheat and plagiarize.

If you keep looking for shortcuts, you would end up committing plagiarism. More specifically, when you are writing an essay, try to do some brainstorming. You should spend some thinking about the topic and drawing an outline. Brainstorming would help you reflect on your past knowledge and experiences. In addition, the outline would help you structure your thoughts in a particular order. When I write my essay, I pay close attention to these two things. Without a proper thought process, you cannot generate new and novel ideas.

When you are including someone's idea or findings in your essay, try to write my paper and change its words and phrases. Paraphrasing means changing the order of words or sentences in such a way that the original idea remains intact. You can develop your paraphrasing ability through extensive writing practice. Paraphrasing is easier for people who know different sentence structures along with a wide range of vocabulary. Sometimes students paraphrase in such a way that the original content loses its meaning.

Paraphrasing borrowed content does not make it your own idea. People think they are good at paraphrasing so they have a right to steal others' findings. You are morally obligated to cite your sources and give due credit to the original author. In this regard, you should know the different citation styles. APA, AMA, MLA, Chicago, and Harvard have widely used citation styles. Thus, citing a source with an appropriate citation style is the hallmark of true essay writers.

Sometimes essay writers prefer paraphrasing to quotations. That depends on your discretion, but it is imperative to cite the source. If you are not confident about writing original work, it is better to seek help from a reputed platform. Various companies are offering services regarding academic writing. You can always consult a reliable essay writing service in this regard. These platforms produce completely original and creative work. I have also sought help from such platforms in one way or the other.

There are a few software that can tell you the degree of plagiarism in your paper. You just have to upload the document into the software. Subsequently, the software will compare it to other documents present over the web. Then it would give you a plagiarism report indicating the percentage of plagiarism in your work. You should have an idea about different types of plagiarism. The most usual form of plagiarism is copy-pasting the exact words. This kind of plagiarism is immediately caught by plagiarism checker tools.

The fourth type of plagiarism occurs when you do not cite the source appropriately. This occurs due to a poor understanding of citation styles as well as personal errors. Lastly, the fifth kind is when you cite those sources that do not even exist. It is recommended that the students go through all these tips and guidelines one by one. Plagiarism is not in line with EssayHours.com. Thus, students should do everything in their power to avoid plagiarism. Coming up with original and creative work signifies true academic spirit. Teachers should sensitize students regarding the value of originality and creativity in academic as well as professional life.
